I spent the past month in Morocco working with one of my clients. One of the beauty products Morocco is known for is Argan oil. PURE Argan oil conditions the skin and locks in moisture, improves skin elasticity, helps to heal scars left from acne/cuts/burns/rashes/etc, softens/strengthens nails and cuticles, nourishes/conditions/protect hair, and helps treat pregnancy stretch marks and scars.

A lot of you are pro-natural beauty products BUT a lot of people (including myself) break out when they put coconut oil on their face. I've been using this company's pure argan oil and prickly pear oil and haven't broken out AT ALL. I'm very pleased. :)

Thing is, it's really difficult to find the real deal - even in Morocco (since it's not regulated)! A lot of companies have jumped on the Argan oil bandwagon but what they offer usually isn't pure and it's often mixed with other oils and substances.

Fortunately I discovered an incredible company called KENZA International Beauty. Not only are their products the real deal. The owner is lovely and passionate about providing real, pure argan and prickly pear oils from her home country of Morocco.

Something else attractive about this company is that it's socially conscious. It contributes directly to a woman Argan oil cooperative in Morocco and to women's foundations in the United States. <http://www.kenza-puremoroccanbeautyoils.com/kenza-global-social-change-for-women>

I highly recommend Kenza International Beauty products. They're an investment because of the quality. But it's also a contribution to great causes.
